Olena Krasnonosova, Darya Mykhailenko

THEORETICAL ASPECTS OF CREATING COMMUNITIES BASED ON SUSTAINABLE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF THE REGION

Olena Krasnoносова, Дар'я Михайленко

ТЕОРЕТИЧНІ АСПЕКТИ СТВОРЕННЯ ТЕРИТОРІАЛЬНИХ ГРОМАД НА ЗАСАДАХ ЗБАЛАНСОВАНОГО СОЦІАЛЬНО-ЕКОНОМІЧНОГО РОЗВИТКУ РЕГІОНА

Елена Красноносова, Дарья Михайленко

ТЕОРЕТИЧЕСКИЕ АСПЕКТЫ СОЗДАНИЯ ТЕРРИТОРИАЛЬНЫХ ГРОМАД НА ОСНОВЕ СБАЛАНСИРОВАННОГО СОЦИАЛЬНО-ЭКОНОМИЧЕСКОГО РАЗВИТИЯ РЕГИОНА

Current socio-economic studies convince of the increase of irrational using available resources and growing social tension among the population. The key problem of social and economic development of the region is to ensure the population’s welfare, including both adequate living conditions and income level. Many scientists have been involved in the formation and development of communities, namely P. Gural, A. Batanov, C. Jonassen, G. Hillery, M. Baimuratov, O. Moroz, E. Ostrom, C. Tiebout. However, the accumulated practical experience and knowledge is not enough to clarify the prerequisites for the formation of communities on the principles of sustainable socio-economic development of the region. The article summarizes the approaches to forming communities on the principles of sustainable social and economic development of the region. To form communities on the principles of sustainable socio-economic development of the region, systemic reformation of the administrative and territorial structure at all the levels is required. Based on the provisions of the theory of fiscal decentralization, collective action, social self-organization, it is necessary to clearly identify the advantages of each of them and the possibility of applying provisions in domestic realities.

Keywords: community; sustainable development of the region; society; socio-economic development.

Рис.: 1. Табл.: 1. Бібл.: 10.

Современные социально-экономические исследования убеждают, что нерациональное использование существующих ресурсов, социальное напряжение среди населения усиливаются. Ключевой проблемой социально-экономического развития региона является обеспечение благосостояния населения, включая как обеспечение надлежащих условий жизни, так и уровень доходов. Многие ученые занимались проблемами формирования и развития территориальных громад, а именно: П. Гурай, О. Батанов, С. Джоненсен, Г. Хиллир, М. Баймуратов, О. Моро, Э. Остром, С. Тиобут. Однако практического опыта и накопленных знаний недостаточно для уточнения подходов к созданию территориальных громад на принципах сбалансированного социально-экономического развития региона. В статье выполнено обобщение подходов к созданию территориальных громад на принципах сбалансированного социально-экономического развития региона. Для их создания необходимо системное реформирование административно-территориального устройства на всех уровнях. Грунтуясь на положениях теории фискальной децентрализации, коллективной акции, социальной самоорганизации необходимо четко выявить преимущества каждой из них и возможность применения положений в отечественных реалиях.

Ключевые слова: территориальная громада; сбалансированный развитию региона; общество, социально-экономическое развитие.

Рис.: 1. Табл.: 1. Библ.: 10.

JEL Classification: O18, P25

© Красноносова О. М., Михайленко Д. Г., 2018
Problem setting. The vector of increasing territorial communities’ involvement in economic and social development is inevitable. This is due to the transition from the industrial to the informative society and these changes in the socio-economic system of Ukraine. The practice of most developed countries having embarked on a similar transformation path in the early 80's shows high efficiency of this approach to solving the problems of poverty, inequality, employment, and improving the well-being and quality of life of the population in these countries. Current socio-economic studies convince of the increase of irrational using available resources and growing social tension among the population. The key problem of social and economic development of the region is to ensure the population’s welfare, including both adequate living conditions and income level. One of the solutions to this problem may be the formation of communities able to provide the appropriate level of services and quality infrastructure [1].

Analysis of recent research studies and publications. A number of domestic and foreign scholars such as P. Gural, O. Batanov, C. Jonassen, G. Hillery, M. Baimuratov, O. Moroz, E. Ostrom, C. Tiebout studied in their works the issues of formation, functioning and development of communities.

Selection of previously unsettled parts of the general problem. However, the accumulated practical experience and knowledge is not enough to clarify the prerequisites for the formation of communities on the principles of sustainable socio-economic development of the region.

The object of the article is to generalize the approaches to the formation of communities on the basis of sustainable socio-economic development of the region.

Presentation of the main research material. The state of social and economic development of Ukraine has a direct dependence on the interest and ability of communities to actively engage in the development of their territories. Communities should be gradually transformed from management object to management subject and independently form their capacity. The administrative-territorial structure requires reformation. The purpose of administrative-territorial reform is to increase the economic capacity of communities, districts and regions of Ukraine.

Problems of the administrative-territorial system often raised before experts-economists, lawyers, but everything was slowed down at the stages of elaborating draft laws and conceptual provisions. However, over the years, problems related to the management of territories were intensifying. The inability to enhance economic activity and provide favorable environment for people's livelihoods at the basic level is especially acute in villages, settlements and towns. Formation of capable territorial communities in the framework of a new administrative-territorial structure will contribute to the construction of a new model of territorial administration based on the principles of balancing national interests with the interests of the population of regions and territorial communities, decentralization, subsidiarity, widespread local self-government, capacity and autonomy of territorial communities in addressing local issues. The decentralization reform launched in 2014 aims to promote the optimal distribution of powers between local governments and executive authorities on the basis of subsidiarity and the creation of efficient territorial communities as the basic part of the administrative-territorial system. Within the framework of the reform, fundamentally new processes of cooperation and voluntary association of territorial communities should take place in Ukraine.

It should be noted that each reform requires its scientific and methodical support, performers and a full understanding of its essence. Communities are provided with more authority and resources, which requires responsibility and competence in solving community problems from the part of local authorities.

It should be noted that common life in a certain territory and decision making are inherent in Ukrainian mentality. In the 14th - 17th centuries there were the most progressive models of European self-government. However, the notion of "community" is rather new.
D. Barnes highlights the following features of the community: «historically formed human community with common traditions; a set of social interactions based on family relationships, characterized by residing within the same territory, belonging to a particular social group; common, collective consumer of services, however with the demand of personified and individualized nature, with needs determining public expectations of people to meet these services; a producer of public services that to some extent already relate to the exercise of power and the participation of local civil society institutions in the life support of people; a community can influence local social life, represent the local population with its authority and grant certain powers to it» [2].

C. Jonassen [3], G. Hillery [4] provide the general idea of "community". These authors define a community as a group of people within a certain territory with common culture and social relationships identifying themselves with this group. C. Jonassen attributes the territory, population, interconnection and interdependence of community parts and division of labor in such a community, awareness of the community residents of the belonging to their community as well as the ability to make decisions on a corporate basis to community structure [3]. G. Hillery highlighted the following features of the community: the presence of the territory, general relationships and social interaction [4]. Communities have also been studied by domestic scientists such as M. Baimuratov [5] and O. Moroz [6]. The former studied legal aspects of communities formation and functioning. He highlighted the following features: territorial – joint residence of community members within a certain territory; integrative – formation of a community based on the association of all the residents of a particular territory, regardless of their citizenship; intellectual – the basis of communities constituting is common interests of the residents, being of specific character and manifested in the form of a wide range of systemic individual-territorial ties; property – a community is the subject of the right of communal property; fiscal – community members are payers of local taxes and fees [5]. O. Moroz highlighted the following characteristics of the community: «a common territory of existence (which may include residence, work, possession of immovable property); common interests in solving life issues; social interaction in the process of implementing these interests; psychological self-identification of each member with the community; joint communal property; payment of communal taxes» [6].

One can agree with [9] where a community is defined as «a primary subject of local self-government, consisting of individuals permanently residing in the territory concerned, solving local-level issues directly or through the municipal structures they have formed, having common communal property, owing immovable property within this territory, paying communal taxes and being connected by individual territorial bonds of a systemic nature».

In the conditions of decentralization of power relations in the state, studies of complex social systems, which operate on the basis of collective decision-making and collective action, are of relevance. This requires studying the prerequisites for the effective management of public resources at the local level.

Theories of collective action, fiscal decentralization and social self-organization can serve as the theoretical basis for the formation of communities on the principles of sustainable socio-economic development of the region (Table).

The ideology of fiscal decentralization belongs to the American economist C. Tiebout, who empirically identified the «spillover effect» – the effect of the uniform distribution of resources as a problem of redistribution of capabilities, depending on the preferences and revenues of local communities [7]. He proposes to solve this problem on the basis of the effect of the redistribution of public goods, since the capacity of each individual community depends partly on the availability of public goods in neighboring communities.
Table

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Theory</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Feature</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Fiscal decentralization theory</td>
<td>C. Tiebout</td>
<td>Determines the effect of a uniform distribution of resources as a problem of redistribution of capabilities depending on communities' preferences and revenues</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Collective action theory</td>
<td>E. Ostrom</td>
<td>Communities are able to effectively manage public resources. The features of each community and its ability to self-government affect the quality of public using the resources. The results of creating public goods depend on a well-defined set of rules that arranges creating and using public goods</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Social self-organization theory</td>
<td>I. Prigozhin</td>
<td>Determines the mechanism of self-formation and self-sufficient change in social structures, thus providing a certain state of organization and functioning of a complex system of society</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Free community theory</td>
<td>J.-G. Toure</td>
<td>Determines the right of the community to independent and autonomous existence from the state authority according to its nature. Just as human rights and freedoms are based on the idea of natural rights, the territorial community, having been formed naturally, was recognized irrespective of the state. According to this theory, along with three generally recognized constitutional authorities (legislative, executive and judicial) the fourth one should be recognized - communal (municipal or public) power. The community has the right to own and independent from the central power existence by its nature, while the state does not form, but only recognizes the community</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: [7-9].

The ideologue of the theory of collective action is the American economist and political scientist E. Ostrom. She explored individual characteristics of various communities in the management of shared resources. E. Ostrom identifies the institutions of collective use of common property («the community») as follows: "a well-defined group of individuals, which, by defining the rules for using the resource, creates, in accordance with local conditions, long-term institutional arrangements for monitoring the use of resource, resolving conflicts, administering sanctions. Each level of government can be most effective in providing a certain set of services in the respective territory". According to E. Ostrom, it is expedient to allocate public goods of different levels: local, regional, national. She suggests identifying recipients of public goods and sources of funding for their provision. In this regard, the following provisions make sense in substantiating the directions of reforming the territorial organization of power at the local level: communities are able to effectively manage public resources; the characteristics of each community and its ability to self-government affect the quality of public use of resources; the results of the creation of public goods depend on a well-defined set of rules that organizes the creation and use of public goods. The formation of such preconditions should be based on the institutionalization of social norms of communities, which are effective not only in the formation of cooperative behavior, but also in encouraging co-operative behavior in the long run; Decentralization of power and decision making becomes possible and expedient in case all the participants in the process are interested in its implementation, the interests of users of public resources are coordinated, and the quality of life of the population improves [8].

The theory of social self-organization considers the process and mechanism of self-formation and self-sufficient change in social structures, thus providing a certain state of organization and functioning of a complex system of society. The process of self-organization is dynamic and complex. The theory of social self-organization considers social systems through the prism of the most complex open systems. The high complexity of social systems is an unconditional sign of the nonlinearity of the laws related to the dependence of states of such systems on certain external and internal factors.
According to the supporters of free community theory [10], the right of the community to independently conduct its affairs is as natural and inalienable as human rights, since the community is primary in relation to the state, therefore, the latter shall respect the freedom of community self-organization.

The free community theory is based on the following principles (Fig.) [10].

- The right to independence from the central government of local self-government, and therefore the state does not form a community, but only recognizes it.
- The right of communities to manage their own affairs, being different by their nature from the state ones.
- The need for division of affairs into the ones, managed by the community and the ones, transferred to it by the state.
- Recognition of non-state nature of local self-government bodies.
- Non-interference of state bodies in cases attributed to own competence of the community and control only, so that the community does not go beyond its competence.
- Election of local self-government bodies is performed strictly by community members.

"A community, according to A. de Tocqueville, “is the only association that is so well-suited to the very human nature, since, wherever people draw together, the community forms as if by itself”. However, although the community has existed for a very long time, public freedom remains something rare and fragile ...It arises out of thin air and develops almost imperceptibly in the bowels of the semi-dense society, and only with the continuous influence of laws and customs, circumstances and especially the time it succeeds to strengthen at last». At that «it is the community that is built on the power of free peoples... Without communal institutions, a nation can form a free government, but it will never acquire the true spirit of freedom» [10].

According to the free community theory, the existence of traditions in the community serves as one of the main conditions for its successful operation. This causes the need to take into account the historical and cultural halo in the area in the formation of territorial communities.

Conclusions. To create communities on the principles of sustainable socio-economic development of the region, systemic reformation of the administrative-territorial system at all the levels is required. Based on the theories, it is necessary to clearly identify the advantages of each of them and the possibility of applying the provisions in domestic realities. Formation of communities on the basis of sustainable socio-economic development of the region leads to the unification and streamlining of the system of administrative and territorial units, increasing the efficiency of using budget funds; improving the quality and accessibility of public services to the population.
References

Красноносова Олена – PhD in Economics, Associate Professor, Senior Researcher in the Macroeconomic Analysis and Forecasting Department of the Research Center for Industrial Development Problems of the National Academy of Sciences of Ukraine (1-a Inzhenernyi Ln., 61166 Kharkiv, Ukraine).

Красноносова Елена Николаевна – кандидат экономических наук, доцент, старший научный сотрудник отдела макроэкономической политики и регионального развития Научно-исследовательского центра индустриальных проблем развития НАН Украины (пер. Инженерный, 1-а, г. Харьков, 61166, Украина).

Михайленко Дар’я Геннадьевна – кандидат экономических наук, доцент, старший научный сотрудник отдела макроэкономической политики и регионального развития Научно-исследовательского центра индустриальных проблем развития НАН Украины (пер. Инженерный, 1-а, г. Харьков, 61166, Украина).

E-mail: krasnonosova@gmail.com

E-mail: Mikhailenko.dg@gmail.com.